Program

Housing Forum Issaquah Senior Center

Ava Frisinger, Former Issaquah Mayor opened the Program

Pam Piering, Former Aging and Disability Services Director was the Moderator

Panelists included

- John Wilson, King County Assessor, Department of Assessments
- Clark Fulmer, Director, King County Low Cost Housing Repair Programs,
- Yichuan Zhao, Regional Manager, King County Housing Authority
- Shawli Hathaway, Assistant Director Resident Services, KCHA
- Klaas Nijhuis, Senior Planner, ARCH – A Regional Coalition for Housing

The audience was given the opportunity to raise their concerns about housing which included:

- Vast increase in the cost of rentals.
- Importance of staying in home.
- Scarcity of housing.
- Importance of planning for “long-term homes” that allow people to age in place.
- Transportation, an essential element to age in place.
- Change building code requirements for senior facilities to accommodate people as they age.
- Provide tax exemptions for Universal Design.

Panel Presentations/Discussion

John Wilson, King County Assessor, encouraged seniors making less than $40,000 per year to apply for the property tax exemption at <http://www.kingcounty.gov/depts/assessor/Forms.aspx> . Recently they've received 7500 new applications resulting from increased outreach.

Klaas Nijhuis, ARCH “A Regional Coalition for Housing” (geographic scope: East King County) provides subsidies for homes, community planning, and affordability. Klaas reported, 20% of their investments are for senior housing.

Clark Fulmer, King County Housing Repair Program helps older adults age in-place (Note: 80% of their clients are seniors) through the Home Access Modification Program. Approximately 150 applications are received each year serving areas outside Seattle, Auburn, Kent, and Federal Way (those jurisdictions have their own programs). In addition, a Mobile Home Grant Program is available.

Yichuan Zhao, Regional Manager King County Housing Authority

The King County Housing Authority provides public housing and Section 8 vouchers outside the Seattle and Renton city limits. Half of their public housing portfolio dedicated to senior housing.

KCHA also provides moderately subsidized housing, including a senior building in Issaquah. Unfortunately, the Section 8 waitlist is currently closed.

Shawli Hathaway, Assistant Director Resident Services, King County Housing.

The Resident Services Program at KCHA is designed to improve life outcomes. Eight full-time staff provide service coordination to support residents so they are able to maintain their housing. KCHA maintains strong partnerships with community providers including: Sound Generations, Full Life, AmeriCorps, cleaning & decluttering services, weatherization and reasonable accommodations.

Panel Discussion

Question: How should we adapt to the future?

Answer:

Shawli: KCHA is currently developing an aging-in-place plan, a Transit Oriented Development plan, and improvements in service coordination.

Yichuan: Preservation of this region's affordable housing. KCHA recently acquired senior housing in Bellevue and Redmond. They look for building and community accessibility, including walkability.

Clark: Continue outreach to folks unconnected to services. Their programs offer deferred, no payment equity loans. (Note: Reverse mortgages can make it difficult, but they are exploring options to make it work).

Klaas: Connects with non-profit developers and electeds. For example, a recent Redmond project in partnership with Providence co-located with a PACE program. Projects take will & partnerships. ARCH collaborates with Eastside cities on building codes to expand affordable housing options. Such as providing information to cities integrating Accessory Dwelling Units (ADU) into building codes.

John: The Assessor's office is making it easier to qualify for property tax exemptions by taking away the hurdles. The current $40,000 threshold is too low for King County. They are also looking at creating a property tax exemption to preserve existing housing and encourage building ADUs by making building codes senior friendly. Another option they are pursuing is changing zoning requirement to allow the placement of age-friendly housing at the ground level.

Question: How do you let residents know about property tax exemption?

Answer: John: Social media, partnerships, events. They may pursue other partnerships, e.g. tax prep agencies.

Question: Is there a tax exemption for accessible ADUs?

Answer: John: There is no exemption currently. We can encourage. If passed it might not apply to existing buildings.

Question: Can you provide contact info for your agency?

Answer:

- John Wilson, King County Assessor, Department of Assessments john.wilson@kingcounty.gov, Sara.Franklin@kingcounty.gov, 206-263-1105
- Clark Fulmer, Director, King County Low Cost Housing Repair Programs (clark.fulmer@kingcounty.gov)
- Yichuan Zhao, Regional Manager King County Housing Authority YichuanZ@kcha.org
- Shawli Hathaway, Assistant Director Resident Services, KCHA ShawliH@kcha.org
- Klaas Nijhuis, Senior Planner ARCH, KNijhuis@bellevuewa.gov

Question: How many applications are received for housing repair program? How are they vetted?

Answer: Clark: 125-150 completed projects a year. Applications must fit HUD's guidelines for household size & income. Eligibility is 80% of AMI.

Question: Can you provide an overview of SHAG?

Answer: SHAG, is a Washington non-profit organization, formed approximately 30 years ago to build stable housing for seniors. SHAG properties charge a higher rent than public housing. They have a small service coordination program.

<https://www.housing4seniors.com/>

Question: Where to start?

Answer: ARCH created a housing resource binder for senior centers. A great place to start is your local senior center. There are a range of options in the binders. Also, people can contact Community Living Connections- 206-962-8467 and 211, or search listings on Craigslist, <http://www.housingsearchnw.org/> and/or provider websites.

Question: What support is available for caregivers?

Answer:

Clark: We receive applications to address the needs of live-in caregivers.

Shawli: Caregivers are underappreciated and under-resourced. A reasonable accommodation may allow residents with live-in caregiver to qualify for a 2-bedroom unit and address any medical need. Examples include tub cuts, walk-in shower, widening doorways, etc.

Question: Can we bridge the need of affordable housing and impact of increased density?

Answer:

John: This is a central policy issue. Could we have a homestead exemption? What about renters?

There is a challenge of equity and affordability. Can we incentivize affordable housing?

Use transfer of development rights? Growth is good, but we need to address affordability.

Klaas: Jurisdictions have affordable housing requirements. e.g. downtown development requires affordable housing.

Yichuan: People are being pushed out. We are looking at preserving housing in areas of high density and opportunity.

Question: What is the effect of Amazon's new headquarters outside the region?

Answer: Amazon has driven housing demand. The impacts are uncertain. Amazon recognizes the affordability crisis. Vancouver BC and San Francisco are the examples. Tech firms need to invest in housing.

Question: Tell us more about homelessness?

Answer:

John: Recently spoke with Executive Constantine and Fred Jarrett. They identified two surplus King County properties. The cost of building one unit of homeless housing is $350k+. One concept being explored is to put modular units on surplus land. An ADA compliant modular unit is $70,000. In Seattle two acres have been identified which could fit 100 units. We have the resources, it's a question of will.

Shawli: KCHA has the lowest eviction rate of housing authorities. They are ending veteran homelessness through the VASH program. One individual lived in the woods for 20 years. Prevention is the key to address homeless children and families and end chemical dependency.

Clark: The home repair program is a homelessness prevention strategy in which people can age in place in a safe environment.

Question: Of current trends/challenges, how can we be part of the solution? What can we do together?

Answer:

Klaas: The community can solve homelessness by working with ARCH and having conversations with electeds. An example was the collaborative partnerships working together to build Bellevue's homeless shelter.

Yichuan: Important to be involved e.g. homeless shelter in Bellevue required partnerships.

Shawli: Highland Village began with learning about the situation from community members through the school. Partnerships are key – school, healthcare, local government, etc.

John: Take a holistic view of housing. It is a fundamental need. Demand that we work together to change rules and break down silos.

Clark: The King County home repair program works with Rebuilding Together, Habitat for Humanity, churches, etc.
